Resources

© sirtravelalot/Shutterstock.com

Education is key to providing a long-term solution to pollinator decline and ensuring healthy insect populations in the future. Education is necessary not only for the youth and upcoming generations but for those who are already making decisions that impact the natural world. By providing resources and tools which highlight the importance of pollinators and ways that insects can be protected from the threats they face. Communication is key to education and below are some tools for both educators and communicators.

Educational materials

Communication materials